Circulability Training is a free digital resource for managers of work organisations that employ people with disabilities. It is a tool for the economic management of food waste recovery activities and provides the necessary skills to initiate such an activity. This training illustrates the economic management of circular food waste recovery activities.

Description of the tool

Each step of this training focuses on a particular aspect of the implementation of unsold food recovery activities. This ranges from understanding the main principles of the circular economy to creating a business model and studying the economic and social environment. The issues related to the employment of disabled people are dealt with transversally in each unit.

Use of the tool

The training is composed of three units:

- 1-Circular economy and resilience
- 2-Local economy and alternative systems
- 3-Ethical and exclusive business models.

Its estimated duration is 20 hours.

At the end of each unit you will have access to either a practical activity or a good practice.
